1. About Lisbon

Lisbon is one of Europe's sunniest capital cities, situated on seven hills at the right bank of the estuary of the Tagus River that flows into the Atlantic Ocean.

Being a melting pot of different architectural styles and without lacking illumination, a walk through Lisbon's grid of long cobblestoned avenues and streets is a unique experience. Its beautifully blue sky transforms the Portuguese capital into a true palette of colours, highlighting the city's contrasts, the heritage monuments, numerous belvederes and characteristic old neighbourhoods, a genuine world apart.

A list of places to visit spans a wide range, from the monumental zone of Belém, Castelo de São Jorge, to the modern area of the Parque das Nações (Expo). As night falls, the city movement shifts towards areas of Baixa, Chiado and, especially, Bairro Alto. Many beautiful beaches are easily accessible by public transport. Another option could be charming Sintra, around 30 km away from the city, with a visit to Cabo da Roca, a cape which is the westernmost point of (mainland) Europe, or the coastal town of Cascais.

Regarding gastronomy, there is a large variety, from seafood and fresh grilled fish and Mediterranean-like cuisine, to heavy traditional meat dishes. Being a cosmopolitan city, Lisbon offers a number of multi-national cuisine restaurants.

2. Meeting location: University of Lisbon – Faculty of Sciences

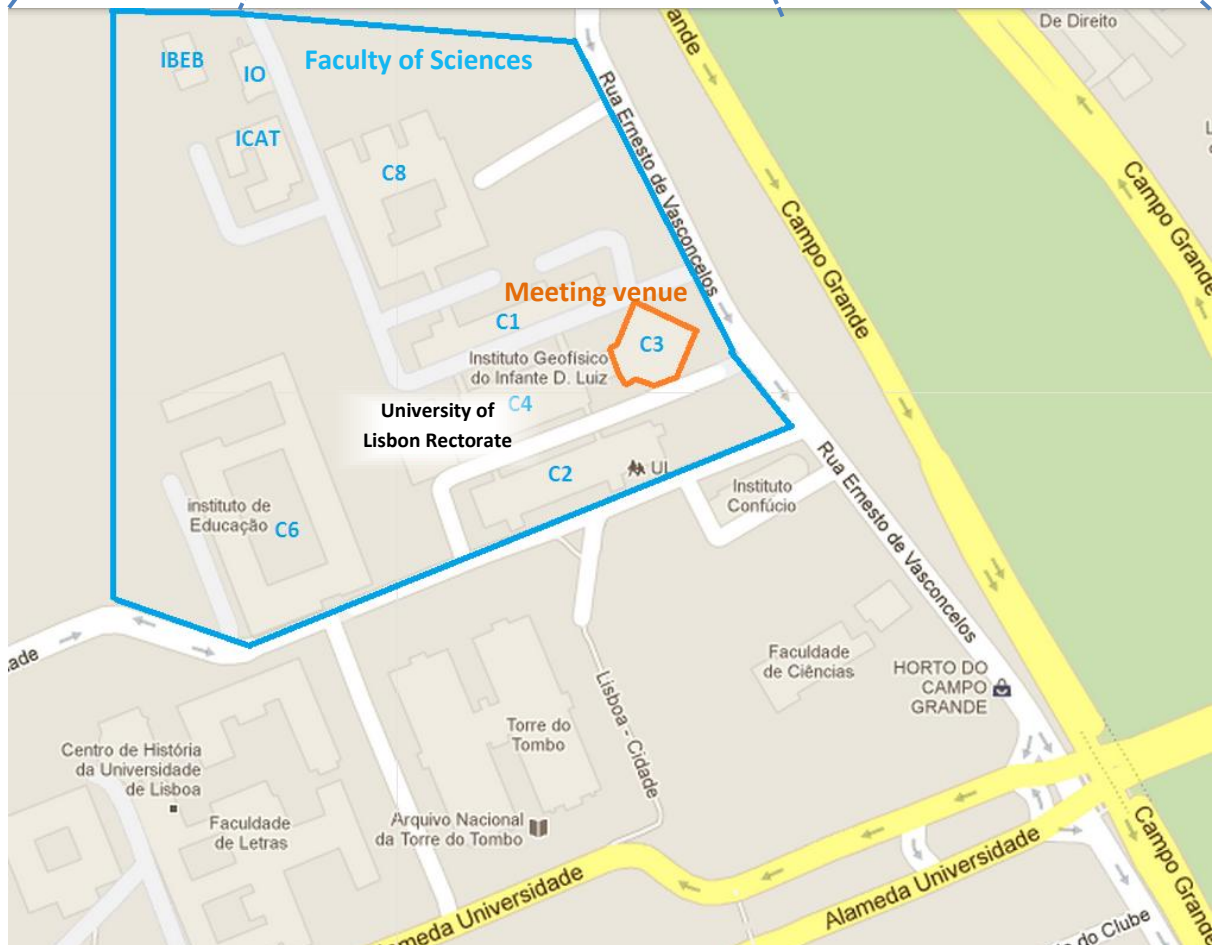

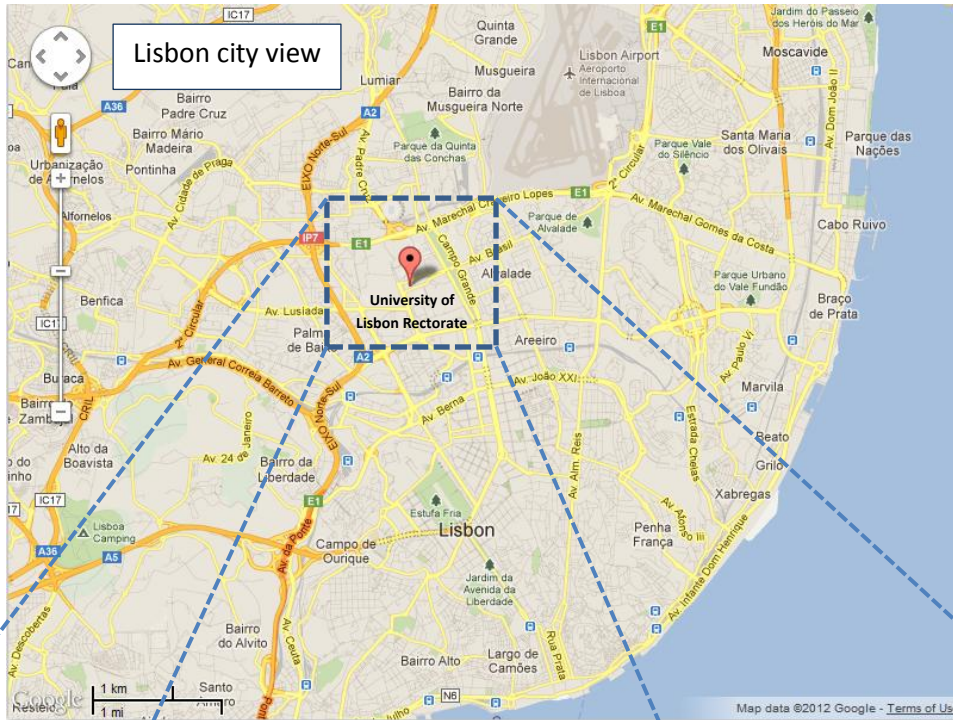

Portuguese University has very ancient origins which affiliate in the request driven to Pope Nicolas IV, dated from 1288, of the creation of a general study, in Lisbon. The University Headquarters changed until 1537 and in that break of time was in Lisbon or in Coimbra. It was definitely transferred to Coimbra, in 1537, where it remained as the only institution of the country. It was only in the 19th century that higher education reappears in the capital: Medical and Surgical School of Lisbon (1836), Pharmacy School (1836), Polytechnic School (1837) and the Higher Course of Letters (1859).

These four schools were united in the Universidade of Lisbon, by the University Constitution of 19 April, 1911 – created by the decree of 22 March, 1911 – changing their denominations to those known today. Lately, more changes in these faculties happened and more research and education institutions were enclosed. It is the case of the Bacteriology Institute Câmara Pestana, the Geophysics Institute Prince D. Luiz, the Institute of Vocational Counselling, the National Museum of Natural History (which includes the Bocage Museum, the Botanic Garden and the Mineralogical and Geological Museum) and the Science Museum.

The meeting will take place at the University of Lisbon – Faculty of Sciences
